Food Safety Management

Preparing Food Control Plans to meet new New Zealand Food Safety Authority (NZFSA) requirements.

This course is for all food producers, processors, sellers, distributors and importers who will be required to operate food control plans, as proposed in the NZFSA Domestic Food Review, October 2006. A transition period from the current practices to implementing the new requirements commences from 1 July 2008. Those unfamiliar with the new requirements will find this course particularly informative and instructive.

This course will:

- Explain the principles and purpose of the new requirements
- Show you how to prepare a management plan to produce safe and suitable food that incorporates good operating practice using the HACCP (Hazard Analysis and Critical Control Point) technique
- Explain the evaluation and external verification process.

Suitability

Persons that are, or will be, responsible for developing and implementing the Food Control Plan should attend this course. Those participating may start the planning and development of their own plan during this two-day course.

Presenter

Tutor John Woolley has extensive experience in both setting up and training in food safety programmes. He was involved with developing and adapting the HACCP technique in New Zealand since the early 1980s.

Please note

The number of participants for each course is restricted to ensure a trainer/participant ratio that will ensure effective training outcomes.
